Intelligent Power Management Strategies for Renewable Energy Integrated Electronic Systems

Michael Anderson

Canada

Abstract

This study proposes an intelligent power management framework for renewable energy-integrated electronic systems, focusing on improving energy utilization, supply reliability, and operational efficiency under variable generation and load conditions. The proposed methodology integrates renewable energy sources, battery energy storage, and electronic load management through an adaptive supervisory control architecture. Machine learning-based forecasting techniques are employed to estimate renewable power availability and short-term electricity demand, while model predictive control coordinates energy distribution and battery charging decisions. The framework incorporates battery state-of-charge constraints, converter efficiency, power balance requirements, and load prioritization to minimize energy losses and maintain system stability. A multi-objective optimization strategy balances operating costs, renewable energy utilization, battery degradation, and power supply continuity. Performance evaluation considers forecasting accuracy, energy efficiency, voltage regulation, battery cycling, and computational responsiveness. The proposed approach supports reliable, sustainable, and intelligent power management in renewable-powered electronic and embedded computing applications.

Keywords: Intelligent Power Management; Renewable Energy Integration; Model Predictive Control; Energy Storage Systems; Smart Electronic Systems.

1. Introduction

Enterprise applications depend on reliable diagnostics to detect runtime errors, failed workflows, API issues, slow transactions, and integration faults [1]. Logs are the main evidence source for understanding what happened before, during, and after an incident. Effective application diagnostics require structured logging, traceability, contextual metadata, error classification, and operational visibility [2]. However, fixed logging strategies often create two problems. Low-detail logs may miss important causes, while high-detail logs may generate excessive storage cost and alert noise [3].

The main challenge is that diagnostic needs change during runtime. A normal transaction may require only basic logs, but a failing workflow, repeated exception, or security-sensitive event may need deeper traces [4]. Adaptive logging improves this process by changing log depth according to system condition, transaction risk, and error behavior [5]. AI-assisted monitoring can identify when additional diagnostic detail is needed and when logging can return to normal levels. This article proposes an adaptive logging framework for enterprise application diagnostics.

2. Methodology

The proposed framework captures log metadata from application servers, API gateways, databases, background jobs, authentication modules, and integration services [6]. It records event type, severity, timestamp, user role, transaction ID, request path, error frequency, response time, affected component, and workflow state. These features are converted into diagnostic context profiles. Adaptive logging requires context because the same event may be low-risk in one workflow but critical in another [7].

The logging controller classifies runtime states as normal, warning, error-prone, performance-risk, security-sensitive, workflow-critical, or incident-active [8]. Based on this classification, it adjusts log level, trace depth, parameter capture, correlation ID tracking, and diagnostic enrichment. Lightweight scoring and policy rules are used so logging decisions remain fast and explainable. Sensitive fields are masked before storage, and transaction-critical events are linked with workflow and database identifiers for easier diagnosis.

The framework is evaluated using simulated enterprise applications involving APIs, database workflows, authentication events, scheduled jobs, and service integrations. Static logging is compared with adaptive logging under repeated exceptions, slow requests, failed jobs, API timeout, suspicious login, and workflow interruption scenarios. Evaluation metrics include diagnosis time, log volume reduction, root-cause evidence quality, missed-event rate, storage overhead, alert usefulness, and administrator acceptance rate. Feedback from resolved incidents, ignored logs, and administrator notes is used to refine logging policies over time.

3. Results and Discussion

The results show that adaptive logging improves diagnostics by capturing richer evidence only when runtime risk increases. In the baseline condition, static logs either lack enough detail or produce large volumes of low-value records. With the proposed framework, detailed traces are activated for high-risk events and reduced during normal execution. The strongest improvement appears in intermittent failures, where deeper logs are needed only around the failure window.

The discussion shows that adaptive logging must balance diagnostic depth with privacy and storage cost. Excessive logging can expose sensitive data or overload monitoring systems, while weak logging may hide failure causes. The main limitation is that log-level decisions depend on accurate runtime classification. Regular policy review and masking controls are necessary for safe long-term use.

4. Conclusion

This article presented an adaptive logging framework for enterprise application diagnostics. The framework adjusts log detail using runtime context, risk scoring, workflow state, and error behavior. It improves troubleshooting by increasing diagnostic evidence during abnormal conditions while reducing unnecessary log noise during normal operation. The study shows that adaptive logging can strengthen enterprise diagnostics when combined with structured metadata, privacy controls, and continuous incident feedback.

References

1. Quynh, N. V., Ali, Z. M., Alhaider, M. M., Rezvani, A., & Suzuki, K. (2021). Optimal energy management strategy for a renewable-based microgrid considering sizing of battery energy storage with control policies. International Journal of Energy Research, 45(4), 5766-5780.
2. Lei, M., & Mohammadi, M. (2021). Hybrid machine learning based energy policy and management in the renewable-based microgrids considering hybrid electric vehicle charging demand. International Journal of Electrical Power & Energy Systems, 128, 106702.
3. Rosero, D. G., Díaz, N. L., & Trujillo, C. L. (2021). Cloud and machine learning experiments applied to the energy management in a microgrid cluster. Applied Energy, 304, 117770.
4. Ramesh, M., Yadav, A. K., & Pathak, P. K. (2021). Intelligent adaptive LFC via power flow management of integrated standalone micro-grid system. ISA transactions, 112, 234-250.
5. Pramila, V., & Chandramohan, S. (2021). Intelligent energy scheduling in a microgrid with custom power devices. The International Journal of Electrical Engineering & Education, 58(2), 572-589.
6. rao Gondi, S. (2020). Intelligent Fault Detection and Classification in Semiconductor Manufacturing Using Statistical Learning Techniques. Transactions on Smart Electrical and Computational Systems, 7, 26-31.
7. Melath, G., Rangarajan, S., & Agarwal, V. (2020). Comprehensive power management scheme for the intelligent operation of photovoltaic-battery based hybrid microgrid system. IET Renewable Power Generation, 14(10), 1688-1698.

8. Shivam, K., Tzou, J. C., & Wu, S. C. (2021). A multi-objective predictive energy management strategy for residential grid-connected PV-battery hybrid systems based on machine learning technique. Energy Conversion and Management, 237, 114103.